

00:21:01 Susan Solomon: We should catch up at some point. Hope all is well with you

01:05:48 Ishita Shah: Thank you for this succinct introduction to your research.

Given the nature of real estate as a field of practice, I was curious if there was a consideration of engaging with public and lived histories. Were there any sources to study public opinion or experiences from those times and spaces?

Alternatively, how do you see this kind of research feeding into the (recent) future of real estate practices in the country? Who will it really matter to, in practice?

01:17:24 David Brownlee: Many thanks, Davide! I have to run to another Zoom.

01:17:42 Davide Spina: Thank you!

01:17:59 Carla Yanni: Bye, David! Thanks for attending

01:20:11 Julia Walker: Thank you, Davide, and congratulations!

01:20:45 Angela Shyaka: Congratulations Davide! Thank you for sharing.

01:27:11 Zeinab Tamassoki: Thank you very much for this informative and intriguing presentation. I enjoyed and learned. I am still curious how and in what process you shaped the final decision to structure your thesis and its chapters. Could you elaborate more on that? Whether the structure was organically formed gradually or a strict organization was decided beforehand.

01:27:24 Zeinab Tamassoki: Please read me out

01:30:24 Zeinab Tamassoki: Thank you.

01:33:07 Sben Korsh: need to leave, but thank you all for the fascinating talk!

01:33:17 Carla Yanni: Thanks, Sben

01:34:08 Ishita Shah: Thank you SAH and Davide for these conversations.

01:36:02 Soumya Dasgupta: Thank you Davide, and thank you Charlette and SAH for organizing this!

01:36:19 Marco Moro: Thanks Davide, congratulations! And thank SAH for the great initiative.

01:37:34 Carla Yanni: Congratulations, Davide!! Great job moderating, Charlette!

01:37:51 Zeinab Tamassoki: Thanks Davide, Charlette and SAH for this wonderful talk.
