A Note about Reader's Reports

The author requests the publisher to submit two or more detailed peer reviews of the manuscript that provide substantive, analytical evaluations of the manuscript, addressing its originality, the significance of the scholarly contribution, and the quality of the research and prose. Reader's reports must be written by authorities on the material of the book. The author should respond to anonymous versions of these reports, clarifying how readers' responses are incorporated into the manuscript.

Reader's reports should be submitted by the publisher and should be anonymous to the author but signed and dated for the benefit of the jury (to be kept confidential), and they should not be more than three years old. The jury does not admit reports written by the author's dissertation adviser or other interested parties, such as a series editor.
